Order an HPV self-test

Dear ((fullName)),

We’re inviting you to do a test for human papillomavirus (HPV) at home.

HPV is the name of a very common group of viruses. They do not cause any problems in most people, but some types can cause cervical cancer.

Why you’re being invited

Our records show you have been invited for cervical screening, previously known as a ‘smear test’, but have not attended in a while.

Cervical screening tests for high-risk HPV and can let you know if you’re at risk of developing cervical cancer.

For those who haven't had regular cervical screening, we're offering an alternative option called HPV self-testing.

What HPV self-testing is

HPV self-testing checks for high-risk HPV, which causes nearly all cervical cancers.

It's not a test for cancer. It's a test to help prevent cancer.

How to order a test

1. Order your free kit online at https://www.hpvtest.nhs.uk/invite or by scanning the QR code above.
2. Do the test following the instructions in the kit.
3. Return the kit in the prepaid packaging.
4. We will send you your results within 14 days.

Please turn over for more information

It's different to the cervical screening test done at your GP surgery or sexual health clinic. You will take a sample from your vagina and won't need to reach your cervix. You might find this more comfortable than cervical screening at your GP surgery or sexual health clinic.

Find out more about HPV self-testing at https://www.nhs.uk/hpv-self-testing

Why it matters

Even if you feel well, it’s important to get tested.

You should take part even if:

- you've had the HPV vaccine
- you've had normal results in the past
- you’re not currently sexually active

Getting your results

If your test is negative, you won't need to do anything.

If your test is positive, we'll ask you to go for a cervical screening test at your GP surgery or a sexual health clinic. This is to check for any abnormal changes to the cells in your cervix.

Other ways to get tested

You may still be invited for your routine cervical screening with your GP. If this happens, we recommend you book an appointment.

Additionally. if you don’t want to take part in HPV self-testing, you can still come for your regular cervical screening, even if you were invited months or years ago. Contact your GP surgery or sexual health clinic to make an appointment.

Order your kit over the phone

You can call 0123456789 to order your HPV self-testing kit over the phone if you are not able to order it online.

To get this letter in another format, send an email to england.contactus@nhs.net or call 0300 311 22 33.
